

Pictures for Rachel: Good Little Christian (Good Little Christian Series Book 1)

Sitting on the loser side of the quad, Steven slowly eats his sandwich as he waits patiently for her. Today was the same as any other day of high school for him. He would sit in this spot waiting to see her; the girl of his dreams, the hottest girl in school. Rachel Miller. He chose this spot freshman year because it was the best place to watch her and still be far enough away for no one to see that he was doing so. He was that pathetic. He shouldn't be doing this at all. He should walk away and leave her alone. Let her live her life with the beautiful people. She didn't deserve to be stared at by some dorky nobody across the quad. He should get up and walk away and yet as she sits down in her spot, he finds it hard to look away. There she sits on the bench as her friends Heather and Trent sit on the table beside her. She was so perfectly gorgeous that he couldn't find the will to look away. He reached into his backpack and found his camera. Just a few shots and that was it. He really didn't need any pictures of her but it felt wrong to not capture such perfection. She pulled her braid over her shoulder and his finger snapped the picture before his mind was able to talk him out of it. She was so polite and considerate. He wondered if anyone around her even cared what a special person they had sitting next to them. He zoomed in and took a few more of her smile as she laughed with her friends. Somewhere a deep pit within him ached. He loved the sound of her laugh. If only he was cool enough to talk to her. Maybe he could make her laugh. Maybe she could see that he was an okay guy. He wouldn't bother her with annoying pick-up lines and repeatedly telling her how hot she was. He wouldn't find reasons to run his hands all over her or suggest inappropriate things. He would treat her like she should be treated. Like a person. Like the special person that she was. If only he had the chance to talk with her. He placed his camera back into his backpack and told himself that he was crazy. If he ever did talk to her she would probably see him as sub-human and dismiss him completely. He picked up his Pepsi and drank about half of it before he reached for his comic. It was better for him to get lost in the story than to sit here pining for something that was never going to happen. Disgusted with her life and her friends Rachel turned her back to them. If Owen touches her one more time she might punch him in the nose herself. Why was this school so full of jerks? Where were all the good guys? It was at times like this that she felt so alone. Didn't anyone want to know anything about her? She was a person inside of this body if anyone even cared to notice. There was a little more to her if anyone cared to see. She looked across the quad and saw Goofy Grin reading a comic. He had a new shirt on today. He looked kind of nice in button-up instead of a plain T-shirt. She sighed, feeling trapped in the life she had. She was too afraid to go anywhere without Trent and Heather and too annoyed to stay here. If only she had a friend she could really talk to; someone who would understand and see the person that she really was.
